THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Neutrality Is A Sham

Washington, Sept. 30.
WITHIN the past few weeks the belief has grown strong that isolation sentiment in the country has largely evaporated and that the people generally have swung more solidly behind the President despite—or perhaps because of—the fact that, as Secretary Knox stated, we now hover on the very threshold of war.

THE weakening of the opposition to the Administration's foreign policy has been shown by various polls, and there have been other indications, such as the flopping of such weather-vane statesmen as Senator Capper, of Kansas. However, the real test of the truth of these signs will come in Congress, which shortly will be asked by the President to repeal or modify the Neutrality Act, which was put on the statute books in 1939 chiefly through his own instrumentality. While it was considerably emasculated by amendment a year ago, there remains enough of the law still to diminish American effectiveness, restrict American action and render the American policy inconsistent and absurd.

THE mere existence of a law known as the Neutrality Act puts us in a silly position, inasmuch as we long ago ceased to be in the least neutral—even in appearance—and are now engaged in a tremendously publicized effort to aid England in crushing Hitler and winning the war. In recent months we have extended this aid to Russia, and our whole attitude is belittled in the extreme. There isn't so much as a trace of neutrality left in us, and if there were no other reason than that of self-respect the neutrality law

MONEY STOLEN FROM EMPLOYER HIDDEN IN SHOE BY AN ALIEN

21-Year-Old Youth Robs Hulmeville Man Who Befriended Him

SECURES SUM OF $40

Victim is Lewis K. Brunner; Young Man Taken To County Prison

HULMEVILLE, Oct. 1.—A chain of events, so fantastic as to cause bewilderment both to the victim of a theft, and to police officials likewise, culminated in the arrest here last evening of a 21-year-old youth who claims he is a native of Sweden, and who for nearly two years past has kept his eye on a local family which befriended him, only to "lift" money from their home yesterday.

Apprehension came in a peculiar manner last night, however, for Karl Heinrich Brandt, alias Carl Erdlin, before he could make a get-away which Pennsylvania Motor Police feel was planned to take place early in the evening.

The one robbed is Lewis K. Brunner, Main street, who found the sum of $40 missing from his home, with the finger of suspicion immediately pointing to Brandt.

Brandt, who was arrested by motor police from South Langhorne barracks after turning the money over to a neighbor of Brunner last night, following questioning, was given a hearing before justice of the peace Joseph A. Keating, South Langhorne, and then taken to the Bucks County jail at Doylestown.

A long story precedes the taking into custody yesterday of Brandt, he having on other occasions come in contact with the law as he wandered about the United States. His name and his unusual accent made him a target for questioning by officials on numerous occasions, this coupled with the fact that he is said to be in this

One Industry Here Loses Time Due To Water Shortage

The low water level in the canal is still hampering industry here and some water has been run into the canal from the borough system at Washington street, so as to raise the level sufficiently for the intake pipes of the industries to reach it.

It was also stated that yesterday a lock "somewhere" up the state had been opened to let more water into the stream.

Winder-Simons Wedding Is Solemnized at Byberry

A marriage ceremony performed by Dr. Tomlinson in the Byberry Baptist Church, yesterday afternoon at two o'clock, united Miss Margaret E. Simons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Simons, Jr., of Knights Road, Torresdale, and Private Harold Z. Winder, of Camp Livingston, La., son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Winder, Middletown Township.

A large company of relatives and friends of the contracting parties attended the nuptial ceremony.

Serving his brother as best man was Mr. Warren J. Winder, Middletown Township; the ushers being Messrs. Charles Simons, Torresdale, brother of the bride; and Joseph McClain, Jr., Bath Road. The bridesmaids were the Misses Isabel Simons and Myra Simons, Torresdale, sisters of the bride.

A long bridal gown of white satin was worn by the former Miss Simons, her short veil being held in place by a tiara of pearls. She wore white slippers and carried an arm bouquet of white roses.

The bridesmaids wore floor-length gowns of blue taffeta, they featuring hoop skirts. The sleeves were short and puffed. Blue and white ribbons encircled their hair, with bows appearing at the front; and slippers were white. Miss Isabel Simons carried yellow roses, and Miss Myra Simons had a bouquet of pink roses.

The groom wore his army uniform. For the ceremony, Mrs. Simons, mother of the bride, wore a dress of brown silk crepe, with matching felt hat; and a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Winder was attired in a dress of green silk crepe, black felt hat, and wore a corsage of yellow roses.

One hundred guests were entertained at a reception at the Simons home immediately following the ceremony. Last evening the newlyweds left by motor for Louisiana, they planning to reside at Pineville, La., near Camp Livingston, where the groom will resume his army training at the end of his furlough.

FREE PRESS INDISPENSABLE

Emphasis in Newspaper Week now being observed with more or less informality in all parts of the United States, is naturally being placed upon the freedom of the press. That has always been one of the bulwarks of American democracy, grounded as it is, in the Federal Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson once observed, in substance, that if he had to choose between government without newspapers and newspapers without government, he would take the latter. What he had in mind was the fundamental importance of an informed public opinion which, by reason of its very enlightenment, could not be brought under the iron heel of dictatorship.

The average reader knows that the average newspaper is making a supreme and conscientious effort to separate the significant from the trivial, the true from the false, the sincere from the hypocritical. It is not an easy task, but the success with which it is being undertaken is clearly indicated in sustained levels of circulation and in continuing demand, on the part of a free populace, for printed presentation of both fact and opinion.

AUTUMN SKY

"Starlight, star bright, first star I see tonight..."

It is necessary to be exceedingly alert these nights to determine which of the millions of stars that burst forth with the sudden dusk is the first to meet the gaze. The cooler weather has brought better visibility. The moon is between the harvest and the hunter fullness. Looking up instead of down almost any clear evening after 8 o'clock, one sees a firmament studded with patines of bright gold, as Mr. Shakespeare once said, if it was Shakespeare.

Most conspicuous of all the celestial displays is the Milky Way, of which, though it is hard to realize this, the solar system is a tiny part. It intersects the heavens with its belt of misty light coming from numerous nebulae and suns. But if one stays up late enough he can see stars of brighter magnitude, Sirius and the stars in the constellation of Orion.

There is a healthful diversion in gazing beyond the minutiae of this little world into the mysterious spaces of the universe. What is man that Thou art mindful of him? And what is man that he is not mindful of Thee? Does Hitler ever dare look into the sky on moonless nights, or is he afraid of the thoughts and impulses that come from silent immensity?

The feeling persists that if there were a little more of the astronomer in every man, some of the tribulations of the human spirit would abate.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Another gripping story of young Dr. Kildare and his crusty preceptor, Dr. Gillespie, is now showing at the Grand Theatre, with Lew Ayres and Lionel Barrymore. This one is "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Day," dealing with a famous symphony conductor whose increasing deafness furnishes a bafling problem for the physicians.

A counterplot in which the young doctor faces and conquers tragedy and the youthful romance of the older doctor is disclosed, brings in a symphony concert episode in which Barrymore's own composition, "Tableau Russe," recently played with success by several symphony orchestras, is performed.

The Great Game of Follies

should be wiped off the books. Any pretense upon our part of being neutral now is false pretense and hypocrisy and should be abandoned.

BUT there are other reasons for the repeal. While it is true most of the law was nullified when the lend-lease bill was enacted, there remain two provisions which hamper our movements and lessen our force.

One is that under the law no American cargo ship can enter any belligerent port, or even a combat zone, which means waters within 200 or 300 miles of a nation at war. Clearly, this interferes with the full aid to England which it is our policy to give. It prevents us from using American merchant vessels to transport the supplies or to use American war vessels to insure their safety. Under recent Presidential order we can take them to Iceland, but no farther. It does not make sense to proclaim a policy of full aid to England and then rivet upon ourselves legal handcuffs which make full aid impossible.

THE other provision makes it unlawful for any American merchant ship anywhere to be armed. This isn't particularly important so long as the other provision is in force; and there are those who contend that the way in which cargo ships could be armed would be little protection against German submarines and raiders, anyhow. Perhaps not, but in the light of what we are doing and propose to do it is ridiculous to retain it. Of course, the truth is the law never should have been enacted, and Mr. Roosevelt in his most recent magazine article expresses regret for his share in the enactment. It was, as Mr. Baruch once described it, a "scuttle-and-run" act which surrendered rights the American Republic and American citizens had always asserted. It demonstrated an eagerness to keep out of the war almost hysterical in its nature and certainly incompatible with the dignity of a great nation.

NEVERTHELESS, at the time, it certainly reflected the sentiment of the people generally, and there were few dissenting voices either in or out of Congress. The fact that the President, who championed the act two years ago, is now asking for its further modification shows better than anything else the change which has taken place here and the distance we have come. Those who know Congress best have little doubt of the success of the President's request. For one thing, he has got from Congress to date everything he has asked to implement his foreign policy. The only real resistance came on the extension of the selective service proposal, and that dreadfully close vote was due more to local pressure on members of Congress than to national sentiment.

THIS time, of course, the charge will be made by the isolation leaders that repeal, or even modification, of the act would make a fundamental change in our relation to the conflict and, in fact, would be equivalent to a declaration of war by Congress. It may be that argument will be effective and that public sentiment can be aroused against any change. Some good judges insist that, while there unquestionably has been a change of feeling in the Middle West, the people are still far from ready for a declaration of war and are with the President only because of the conviction that the course he has adopted, as he repeatedly has said, is the best way to keep out of war. It is reported that Mayor Kelly, of Chicago, in effect, told the President this last week, when he lunched with him here, warning him of the strength of the peace party in the 1912 election.

THE vote in Congress on the Neutrality Act should be an accurate reflection of popular sentiment on the subject, and it naturally is awaited by both sides with intense concern. Actually, repeal of the act would not be a declaration of war, nor would it necessarily bring us any further into the war than we are now, which is pretty far. Repeal is more logical and more sensible than modification and it would be more honest to ask for it. It would remove shackles which we had voluntarily and unwisely assumed and which clearly clash with our present policy. It would restore to us the complete freedom of action which we should never have relinquished. What we do with this restored freedom is the real question, but there is no sound argument against its restoration.

SENATE STENOGRAPHER by MAXWELL THAYER

SYNOPSIS

Senator Jeffrey Murray, secretly discussing under-cover plans to put over a monopoly bill in the Legislature, is overheard by Gale Holoway, pretty small-town girl, looking for a position. Her accidental eavesdropping brings her a $250 monthly job as Murray's secretary. Visiting Nan Parkson, political hostess, Gale is bumped into a swimming pool by Marie Gibbins, deprived of her job by Gale. Joe Nash, Governor McKurt's handsome secretary, rescues her. Later, Murray is furious when he finds Gale going through his secret files, but his ire vanishes and he insists she accept an apartment, adjoining his, rent free, as he sometimes works at night and wants her within call. Later, she goes to Nan's home to play bridge.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Seated around the bridge table when she arrived were Cedric Colburn, the lobbyist whom she had met just before the pool episode; Thomas Olmstead, young assemblyman, a man identified only as Jim Drake, and Nan. Reading in a big easy chair was Mrs. Drake, while a blonde girl, Mary somebody or other, was sitting on her foot on the Chesterfield. And she was putting.

"Thank heavens you've come," Nan said, getting up. "I've been getting terrible cards and Cedric hasn't done a thing but sit and scowl at me."

"You don't keep your mind on the game," he said it bluntly without inflection in his voice.

The other men had risen when Gale came in and remained standing while Nan and Colburn were talking. Nan introduced them to Gale.

"Sit down, dear," Nan impelled her toward the chair. "I'll get us something to eat and drink."

"But I don't want to take your place—" Gale began.

"Come on, sit down!" Colburn commanded.

Gale sat. "What's the stake?"

"Oh, just a cent a point," Olmstead said. "What Colburn comically calls a friendly little game."

"Pretty steep for me," said Gale.

"I'll back you," it was Colburn. "No," said Gale, "if I lose, I'll pay. But," she smiled at Colburn, "I don't intend to lose."

"Humph!" Colburn broke out a new deck, sorted it, spread the cards on the table and won the deal. He dealt cards like a professional gambler, she thought. Gale had watched professionals at the Reno tables where she had gone with her father on brief vacations.

When she looked at her hand, she thought maybe he had manipulated the pasteboards.

There were five spades, all honors; the ace and king of hearts, the king and deuce of clubs; the ace, queen, jack and four of diamonds. She bid and made a slam on her first hand.

Colburn's mouth smiled; his eyes were as hard and as flinty as ever as he watched Drake shuffling the cards.

Nan entered, with the butler carrying a tray of dainty sandwiches and bottles of liquor and a siphon.

Colburn waved her away. "Not now," he said, "don't change our luck; it's just turned."

"Gale bring you luck?" she asked.

Colburn said nothing, picked up his cards, sorted them, glanced at Drake, folded his hand and leaned back, for Drake was glancing at the cards.

took a Scotch and soda.

Colburn bid three diamonds and refused a drink.

The game wore on with scarcely a word said. Nan watched, Mrs. Drake read and Mary, the blonde, pouted and wriggled.

Gale and Colburn won steadily, for they were a perfect bridge team.

The only break in the evening's card playing was when the blonde came over to the table and put her hand possessively on Olmstead's shoulder. He had just lost a tough hand and was in no mood.

He shrugged his shoulder in a manner that said "don't paw me!" and when the blonde said: "Darling, I'm sleepy and bored. Let's go!" he scowled at her.

"Darling, I'm sleepy and bored. Let's go!" said the blonde.

"No!" he said.

"Please."

"No."

"Then, I'll call a cab and go by myself," she said in a baby voice.

"I'll be a cab and call you a cab myself," he said.

But he didn't. It was the butler who made the call and it was the butler who escorted Mary to the door before she founced out in a huff.

Apparently Olmstead never gave her another thought. He began to feel the drinks which he had been taking steadily. His bridge began to show it and several times Drake pointed out gross errors to him.

"Butler," Drake called. "Take Mr. Olmstead's glass away and bring him a cup of black coffee!"

"I don't want any coffee," Olmstead replied, but when it came he gulped it down. Later his game began to improve, but Gale and Colburn continued to win until finally in disgust, Drake said he had had enough.

Although the background for this story is authentic, the story itself is entirely fictional and the characters are imaginary. Any similarity of names or characters to real persons, living or dead, is purely accidental.

Gale pushed her chair back from the table and relaxed. Suddenly she realized that she was tired, very tired.

Colburn was tallying the score. He tossed it to Drake, who showed it to Olmstead. "Forty bucks apiece," he said.

Before Gale, Drake laid four $10 bills, while Olmstead was paying Colburn.

"There you are, Miss Holoway, and thanks for the bridge lesson," Drake said. "I've played with some people that consider themselves experts, but I never saw any of them handle their cards better."

"But this money isn't mine," Gale protested. "It belongs to Mrs. Parkson. I was only playing for her."

When they returned to the drawing room, the three men were surrounding the fire which was still burning brightly in the fireplace. Mrs. Drake was no longer reading, for her husband was speaking.

... and a smart girl, like this one, could turn the trick. She—

He stopped suddenly as he felt the presence of the two women behind him; then he went on as though unconscious of their presence.

"I've seen smart men players and smart women players. I think a woman's instinct will beat a man's any time. A woman will fight for a trick that a man believes is lost."

Colburn looked at Gale, his mouth smiling, and even his eyes twinkled a little after Gale said:

"I agree with you about a woman's instinct, in part, Mr. Drake. She knows when a man is bluffing, when he has been caught in a bad spot and is trying to throw her off the track."

Drake grinned, too, but Nan, born hostess and probably the best politician in the room, knew when to change the subject.

"Won't you spend the night here?" She had her arm around Gale's shoulder. "I'd love to have you."

"No, thank you," replied Gale. "I have to be at work by 9 and it's late. If you'll just have your man call me a cab."

Olmstead spoke up quickly: "I'll be glad to drive you home."

"I don't want to bother—"

"It's no bother at all, Gale; in fact I think a little ride in the night air is just what I need before turning in," Olmstead decided cheerily.

Gale looked at Colburn and he shook his head very, very slowly.

For some reason, Gale immediately resented his attempting to dictate to her, so still looking at him, she replied to Olmstead: "Thanks, I guess a ride would help."

But when Gale was in the car and out of ear-shot of any of the party, she said she'd changed her mind; she was so tired, and would be please take her right back to her hotel.

"Oh, let's get something to eat," he said.

Gale looked at Colburn and he shook his head very, very slowly.

For some reason, Gale immediately resented his attempting to dictate to her, so still looking at him, she replied to Olmstead: "Thanks, I guess a ride would help."

But when Gale was in the car and out of ear-shot of any of the party, she said she'd changed her mind; she was so tired, and would be please take her right back to her hotel.

"Oh, let's get something to eat," he said.

Gale said she wasn't hungry. "Well, how about a little drink? I need one."

"I'm not in the mood."

"You really are tired, aren't you?" He turned to look at her and she nodded affirmatively.

The street was dark in front of her hotel. Olmstead leaned over in the seat, putting his arm across her shoulder. "A goodnight kiss?"

"No, I'm afraid not." She slid out and paused at the door to hear him say: "You intrigue me, gal; some day you'll find out I'm not such a bad guy after all. And that's a promise."

Gale went to work the next morning full of vigor in spite of the few hours of sleep. She smiled at the sunshine... for this was the life.

Shortly after she arrived, Senator Murray came in, too. He asked if there was any mail of importance and when she handed him the pile, he went through it quickly letter by letter, dictating the answers rapidly from long practice. Many of his answers were as alike as though he had said "Use form A, B, or C."

When he was through, he leaned back in his chair and lighted a cigar.

"There isn't much for you to do today, Gale," he said (he had never called her Gale before), "so when you are through, I think you should get settled; then if you feel up to it tonight, we'll celebrate. I need some relaxation."

But when he saw the expression on her face, he went on to explain: "You know, a dinner at a night club, maybe a dance or two, and then home."

When Gale had typed the letters and signed them for the senator, she donned her hat and walked swiftly toward her hotel. Then packing as swiftly as possible, she paid her bill, left the hotel and soon was entering the apartment which was to be her home.

There were flowers in vases in almost every part of the room. One had a card signed "Welcome Home!" and it was signed, "Jeffrey." Gale sat down, she didn't know whether to laugh or cry.

It didn't take her long to place her few belongings, and when she had hung her things in one of the large closets, she stood back and surveyed them, comparing them with the things that had hung in just one small closet at Nan's.

Then she spied her telephone. "Main 3535" read a white circular card on its face.

Immediately, Gale had the urge to call someone; just anyone, for she had a new toy. She thought first of Joe Nash because she had forgotten to leave her forwarding address when she left the hotel. Then she thought of Nan Parkson, of Cedric Colburn internal revenue, Philadelphia, points out, however, that the new act doesn't specify that service men are to be admitted free. That, of course, is up to the promoters, or those in charge of the event in question.

If a season ticket to any affair had been bought and paid for before October 1st, the tax does not apply. However, if there remains a balance due, or a subscription has been pledged to be paid for later, then the tax is applicable at the rate of ten per cent on the amount due or to be paid.

The new tax on transportation tickets such as railway fare does not go into effect until October 10th.

The new tax, however, becomes effective today on hundreds of other items, such as liquor, beer and wines, automobile tires and tubes, cabaret and night clubs, club dues, new automobiles and accessories, radios and phonographs, refrigerators, matches, long distance telephone calls and telegrams, jewelry, and furs.

The Government also is going to share in the pin ball business and various other types of slot machines. Each pin ball machine will be taxed $10 a year and the rate is to be $50 per year for the slot machines.

Better service. And lower costs. Electrical development has brought both gains to you. For instance, a 60 watt bulb costs 36.5% less to operate today than ten years ago. One of the engineering achievements that helps bring this about is the $55,000,000 Conowingo dam. Built and financed out of private capital by the Philadelphia Electric Company, it is capable of supplying current for a city of 800,000 people.

PHILADELPHIA ELECTRIC COMPANY

Your Patronage Helps Us Serve You Better

It was 2 A.M. when little Betty was seized with the pain. Hardly had the first cry died away before lights flashed on, mother and father were at her bedside. A hurry phone call for the doctor, an electric pad instantly at work.

Then came the mad dash to the hospital. Instruments already were being sterilized in boiling water, lights flooded the operating room to aid the surgeon's skill, a respirator stood guard against an unwelcome but always possible need.

Night after night this tense drama is enacted in Philadelphia or homes nearby. Hardly a dawn arrives without major hospitals reporting emergency night operations. But nowadays there is usually a happy ending because adequate facilities are aiding medical skill to combat human suffering promptly whenever it occurs.

For nearly three generations now it has been the happy privilege of Philadelphia Electric employees and management to devote their talents toward seeing that electricity was instantly ready at all times to meet these emergency needs of you and your friends.

To carry on this work we have assembled a company family of more than 7,000 men and women. They are your neighbors, anxious to help you. Do not hesitate to call upon them in your hour of need.

pany, who responded to the call, had the fire under control in a short time, and the only damage was to a roof over a kitchen adjoining the house.

The fire, it is believed, had its origin in a loft over the kitchen, and in it were stored some household articles and some canned fruit and vegetables. Members of the Kroust family discovered the fire when they found the house filled with smoke. The loss is covered by insurance.

Thirty members of the Bucks County Federation of Fraternal and Social Clubs met Sunday at the Doylestown Moose Home in a business session. Most of the clubs in Bucks county were represented. New taxes and regulations concerning the licensing of clubs were discussed. Wilbur Van-Dyne, Doylestown, attorney for the federation, spoke to the group on legal issues. After the meeting the members were the guests of the Doylestown Moose at a cafeteria supper.

The court house at Doylestown was packed to the doors Sunday with almost a thousand people present at the religious mass meeting sponsored by the Council of Churches which is composed of six churches of Doylestown.

This meeting, inaugurated by the Church and Church School Crusade, which is an eight week program, when special effort will be made to list all church members to attend the church services and the church schools in the several churches. The crusade will begin next Sunday and will continue for seven weeks thereafter.

The address was given by Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell, of Providence, Rhode Island. His theme was "The Church in the Present World Situation."

Fleetwings Dedicates New Modern Cafeteria

erts, Jr., borough engineer; Louis C. Spring, William H. Grundy, Inc.; Linford J. Jones, chief of police, Bristol; Andrew J. Crotty, Jr., president, Francis A. Crotty, treasurer, Joseph M. Gately, vice president, Robert Burns, of Crotty Brothers; Mr. Henderson, of Giffels & Vallet.

The cafeteria, which is under the management of Joseph H. Stafford of Crotty Bros., was officially opened this morning. It will accommodate approximately 150 people. Besides the cafeteria itself, the new facilities include rolling food wagons which will dispense food to plant employees at regular intervals for both day and night shifts.

W. T. Graham, Fleetwings' plant manager, was toastmaster of the evening's program which consisted of a number of brief talks. In his opening remarks Mr. Graham lauded the company's management for its active interest in the employees' welfare, citing as an example not only the new cafeteria but also improved lavatory facilities, better lighting and ventilating, and a number of other innovations.

Mr. Graham traced the growth of the local aircraft plant from the time it consisted of a small group headed by the deGanah family, which had an idea—that of spotwelding stainless steel—until the present time when the plant is playing a vital part in the great defense effort of the nation. Mr. Graham emphasized the need that everyone in the organization has a responsibility in helping the company to continue to grow and achieve its aims. After praising the Fleetwings men-and the Crotty brothers on the cafeteria installation, Mr. Grundy recalled briefly the early history of shipyards which stood on the same grounds that the present Fleetwings' plant occupies. He compared the similar efforts of the two organizations in contributing to the preservation of the country. Speaking of the Bahama Islands, which he visits during the winter, Mr. Grundy said "there are many pointed evidences of the effects of war." Mr. Grundy stated that he believed he could "particularly appreciate what our liberty and freedom, which we are prone to take for granted, mean."

Andrew Crotty complimented the Fleetwings company for installing the cafeteria, and expressed confidence that the new system will meet with the hearty approval of all employees. He explained the rolling food wagons which will carry sandwiches, pastries, ice cream, cold drinks, candy and other packaged food items to the plant men, once in the morning and once in the afternoon, and will be located at strategic spots at lunch time. Warm, packaged foods will be added to the wagons during the winter.

The Crotty Bros. were organized in 1930, according to Mr. Crotty, and since that time have become recognized as outstanding experts in the field of industrial feeding. Plants in which they operate include the United States Rubber Co., American Woolen Co., Remington Rand Co., Royal Typewriter Co., John Deere Co., and the Crane Co. Crotty Bros. will handle the eating facilities in the present plant, as well as the large system planned for the new building.

Short talks were also given by Franklin Wallis, and Messrs. Carl de Ganah, Ira S. Wilson, and Robert W. Ayer of Fleetwings. The entire dedication ceremonies were planned by W. E. Strang, Fleetwings' personnel director.

Following the program the guests inspected the modern kitchen facilities of the cafeteria.

Behind the Scenes
YOUR NEIGHBORS WORK at BRINGING YOU THE NEWS!

They live in our community: shop in our community: raise their families in our community. Meet the members of this newspaper staff . . . your neighbors.

Their jobs are vital in bringing you local, national and world news HONESTLY, in this land where a frank, informative press is your chief guarantee of freedom. Money Stolen From Employer Hidden In Shoe By An Alien country illegally. For nearly three months recently he was in the House of Correction, Philadelphia, officials of which were skeptical of his character, and his intent to go "straight," according to Brunner.

jury for the parents, none knew for some time just who had come to their aid. But when Mr. Brunner regained consciousness in a hospital in Wilmington, he says the first face he saw was that of Brandt. Brandt commenced telling him, states Brunner, how he (Brandt) had alighted from a bus which stopped at the scene of the accident, Brandt proceeding to help in "good Samaritan" style. The youth continued his story, telling how he had brought in "everything" to the hospital, including clothes and purses; then added that he had by virtue of leaving the bus lost the value of his ticket, his fare having been paid some distance beyond. Brunner told his son, Lewis, also a patient in the same room, to give the youth the required $2. Brandt, at the request of young Brunner searched a closet and found the elder Brunner's trousers, handing them to the younger Brunner, who in turn gave the desired amount. At that time the youth had given the name of Carl Erdlin.

Three months ago the young man turned up in this borough, visiting the Brunner garage to inquire if the Brunners remembered him. At that time he gave the name of Brandt, explaining that he had come to the United States with his father four years ago on a visit, adding that now he is unable to get to his native Sweden. He explained that he used the alias because so much trouble had been caused him as he was frequently picked up and questioned, adding that officers "never had anything on me."

was taken to the House of Correction and held for 32 days. Released last Saturday, he came to Hulmeville for the second time on Sunday.

Brunner, feeling that perhaps the young man was really in need of a chance, decided to again help him. The youth was given clothing, his meals, and a job at the Brunner garage, starting on Monday morning. Night lodging was also arranged by Brunner at a South Langhorne hotel. Brandt had requested Brunner to save his wages, so he could purchase a car at Christmas time.

Yesterday afternoon Brunner sent Brandt to the Brunner house, a short distance from the garage, for a bucket of water. Brandt returning in a few minutes time. After dinner last evening, Brunner, who kept in mind warnings he states were given him by House of Correction officials that Brandt was not to be trusted, decided to look about the house to see if things were as they should be. Searching the place where he knew there was about $42.50 Brunner found but $1.50 left.

He immediately told his family, then hurried to the garage, and found Brandt still there. The time was nearing for the garage to open for the evening, and Brunner, playing for time and trying to form plans as to procedure, kept up a steady conversation with the youth until the arrival of William Bailey. Hurrying to the door, Brunner quietly told Bailey to summon a neighbor, C. Wesley Haefner. Brunner "covering" the doorway until he could close and lock the door. He then questioned Brandt about the missing $40. Brandt denying any knowledge of it. When Haefner arrived, and questioned the young man, Brunner hurried to telephone police. A Penna. Motor Policeman arrived shortly afterward, he and Brunner remaining outside at request of Haefner and Brandt, the latter claiming he would talk to the one alone. Brandt then proceeded to take off his shoe, and handed Haefner the $40. The arrest on a charge of larceny followed. In default of bail, Justice Keating ordered Brandt taken to the county prison and held for court.

Leaders In Nation Endorse A Free Press

Newspaper Week should awaken in the hearts and souls of all Americans a renewed determination to defend and maintain and perpetuate the priceless heritage of a free press.

"The maintenance of an unfettered press, informed by truth and guided by courage and conscience and wholehearted devotion to the public welfare, is a fundamental obligation of patriotism.

"I trust as a result of the forthcoming observance that Americans everywhere will have a renewed sense of the incalculable blessing which a free press confers. It must be maintained against all assaults."

Governor Arthur H. James had this to say about the Press of Pennsylvania:

"Pennsylvania's magnificent leadership in public affairs is once again being ably demonstrated by Pennsylvania's newspaper publishers, managers, editors, and reporters in the observance of Newspaper Week, Wednesday, October 1st to Wednesday, October 8th.

"I know of no time when America's newspapers have had a greater role to play than they have at the present time. Today's incident may well be tomorrow's catastrophe, and it is the intelligent editing and assembling of these incidents which is the only contact that the public has with tomorrow's destiny.

"Pennsylvania's newspaper have proven their ability and responsibility in discharging this trust. With notably few exceptions the men at the helm have steered a forthright and intelligent course through hard-to-chart seas momentarily frothy with half truth or whipped up by the winds of conflict into engulfing waves of propaganda.

"That they have been able to follow such a careful journalistic course will ever be a milestone on the path of Pennsylvania's journalistic history.

"Under pressure from within and from without, they have kept us reliably and competently informed. Their representatives have faced almost incredible obstacles in gathering the news from the four corners of the earth and speeding it into print with increasingly amazing rapidity.

"They have brought us pictures of the world holocaust with day-to-day regularity and history making speed. For all of this we are grateful and as the Governor of the Commonwealth's ten million citizens it is my privilege both privately and on behalf of those whom I represent to congratulate Pennsylvania's newspaper people on what they are doing.

"As we realize the tragedy of other countries who have lost their precious right of a free press, let us continue to hope and pray that no matter what crisis we may face in this country, that this right of a free press will always be a constitutional heritage."

William S. Livengood, Jr., Secretary of Internal Affairs, commented about the service of newspapers:

"A free press is the voice of liberty. A controlled press is worse than none, for it is a prostituted agency for the distribution of distorted truths, or absolute falsehoods, for the deception and betrayal of the people.

"The Department of Internal Affairs is engaged very largely in the collection and distribution of information useful to the people of the Commonwealth and the nation. Newspapers afford the widest and best avenue for the promulgation of these facts, which are gladly accepted and freely circulated as a public service. What the newspapers do for the Department of Internal Affairs they do also for every branch of State and Federal governments. Thus the people are acquainted with what their governments are doing, and from the basic information so obtained are able to judge their public officials intelligently and fairly.

"The official who objects to adverse criticism on the part of the press, when that criticism is based on his own words or actions, would do well to reverse the order of his thinking and give his own personal course of conduct a painstaking examination."

"On the other hand, every worthy movement finds editorial championship. This Department for two years has been active in an effort to break up the short-weight coal racket in Pennsylvania. Newspapers, without exception, have given this movement wholehearted encouragement. The General Assembly has enacted a law designed to be helpful in this crusade. Without vigorous and unselfish newspaper support, this act would not have been passed. Coal consumers owe the newspapers a debt of gratitude.

"The newspapers of Pennsylvania constitute a force without which our government would soon deteriorate and our liberties eventually would be lost. They deserve to be safeguarded and substantially supported."

Walter D. Fuller of Philadelphia issued the following statement as president of the National Association of Manufacturers:

"This country's press, both daily and weekly, is as inherent a part of our democratic way of life as freedom itself. From the early Colonial days of handpresses and pamphlet newspapers, it has developed into a major industry without losing a jot of its freedom or wavering a bit in its concept of public duty. It is veritably a bulwark of democracy. Further, in this present crucial period, it has again manifested its versatility and capacity for public service by adapting its facilities to the nation's defense needs."

Governors of many states issued proclamations and statements about Newspaper Week and newspaper meetings were planned in more than 2,000 communities by the Kiwanis, Rotary Clubs, Elks, Eagles, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and other groups.

This is a week when the newspapers, always ready to promote the interests of others, will tell the public a little about themselves. Special emphasis will be laid on the stake of the public in a Free Press, the National Committee having adopted the slogan, "The Newspaper Lights the Way of Freedom."

Last year, 1,500 dailies and 4,000 weeklies observed National Newspaper Week.

"This is the time in which the attention of the American people will be focused upon the freedom guaranteed by the Bill of Rights—among which stand Free Press rights—a freedom enjoyed by all the people," said Mr. Hardy.
